TRADOC

Command Sergeant Major's

Safety and Risk Management Philosophy

As the Army transforms into a more efficient organization with superior goals and objectives, we as the primary leaders of the enlisted force will face new challenges. These challenges must be met with a professional attitude, total competence, and a sense of awareness that echoes the Army values. America does not send her young adults to us as leaders and trainers to have them suffer unacceptable injuries and or death due to a deviation from standards or lack of competence.

Our responsibility is to clearly define the challenge, the standard for success, and the risk we are willing to tolerate to achieve our goals. We must ensure the message is well understood as to our liability for exposing soldiers in training to hazardous situations or environments without proper control measures in place.

Commanders look to us for technical competence and sound advice. Make risk management an integral part of leadership in your organization. Empower junior leaders to make the right decision.

Your personal commitment and support will determine the success or failure of our mission

"NCOs Enforce Standards"

Anthony Williams

ANTHONY J. WILLIAMS
Command Sergeant Major, USA